It would seem, however, that in the interval some prominent members of the Government had been rather roughly handled by the Press, and, not content with seeking their remedy in the Courts, a desire was evinced to discover some means by which troublesome writers could be gagged. This inpublishers to furnish security was the result. We do not, however, wish to put forward this matter of security as a grievance. It may indeed be argued with some force that in a small colony like Hongkong, where it is so easy to escape beyond the jurisdiction of the Courts, some security is necessary in the interests of public justice. Although not assenting to this view, we would not have considered it necessary to oppose it, and had the new Bill merely consolidated the two existing Ordinances and introduced a slight the day previously. Captain Rötger explained in a brief address the nature of his mission to the Marshall Islands, stating that the group henceforth was under the protection of the German empire. This was "translated by an interpreter (an Englishman) to the natives standing around. The German imperial standard was then for the first time hoisted on the islands, all present giving three hearty cheers for His Majesty Emperor William. The detachment of seamen presented arms, the Band striking up a soul-stirring air. The large number of islanders present joined heartily in the shouts of gratulation, and the Nautilus, Gilbert in 1783, as already remarked, consist of which was lying motionless, like "a painted a upon a painted ocean." in the roadstead of Jaluit, fired a royal salute of twenty-one guns. A pole, painted in the German colours, and to which a tablet bearing the inscription "Imperial German Protectorate" was fixed, was then planted between the two German factories standing on the beach. This concluded the ceremony.

- The following day was spent in arranging for a visit to the other principal lagunes of the group, and in bidding farewell to the chiefs. On the afternoon of the 17th October, Mr. Hernsheim, foreign interpreter (an Englishman), and a pilot (a German captain) having embarked on board the Nantilus the vessel left Jaluit, to proceed to Milli Island, arriving there the following morning. The German standard was hoisted during the day in presence of a number of natives, and the chief of the island afterward paid a visit on board, where he signed his name to the document already mentioned. Milli was left on the 19th October and a course shaped for Arno, where the sloop arrived on the evening of the same day. Two chiefs rule over this is land, and for some time past they had been living in a state of war with each other. It appears that in 1834 disturbances occurred in their territory by which some damage was done to the property of the German traders resident. A German man-of-war visited the place and enforced fine of several hundred dollars. One of the chiefs readily submitted to the infliction, but the other refused to stump up, and for this reason the chief who paid his "little bill" declared war against his recalditrant colleague. On the day following the arrival of the Nautilus in Arno the annexing" party left the vessel on a visit to the two chiefs, who received them most cordially, and the dollars due by the previously obstinate one. were at once handed over. The chiefs paid a visit to the Nautilus the same night, where they signed the protectorate document, and finally they were persuaded to shake hands with each other, in token that-they-had buried-the-was hatchet. The officers and other officials on board the man-of-war were then invited to come or shore to witness some of the national dances of the islanders, which invitation was duly accepted The German standard was hoisted the following morning (21st), and the Nautilus left the island

She arrived there at dusk the same day Next morning (22nd October) the chief of lagane and some of his sub-chiefs came on board and signed their names to the paper, the imperia standard being hoisted shortly afterwards. They were greatly pleased with the presents made to them by the German officials, and in reciprocation sent on board a number of pigs, fowls, and baskets of fruit. The chief of the lagune ask-d the commander of the Nautilus for a German fiag to fly over his residence, which was given to him. The English firm of Henderson, Macfarlane & Co have an agency on this island. As a few remarks on the topography of the Marshall group, its people, and their customs may not be out of place here, we give a brief resumo of what we have been able to glean on the subject. The group numbers over thirty larger islands, most of which are inhabited. As to their value, Prince Bismarck's remark respecting the Carolines may also be suitably applied to them, namely, that all the islands are not worth the loss of a single hair of a Pomeranian soldier's two chains, running north and south, sixty to one hundred miles spart. They are low, and have but little ground fit for cultivation, but they produce bread-fruit and cocoanuts in abundance. and yams and bananas in sufficient quantity for the wants of the inhabitants; the northern group also produces arrowroot and melons. Lizards, land and seacrabs and pigeons are to be found there, being indigenous to the islands; pigs, fowls, and cats were introduced into the place. Running water or a spring is not to be found on any of these lagunes, which in reality are gigantic coral reafs, and the water sapply is procured by catching rain water in pits. The islanders are of a dirty dark colour; they grow a beard of the scanty kind, and the whole of their body is taloood; native priests generally do the tatlooing, which is so expensive that the poor have to work several years before they can save money enough to indulge in the luxury; it takes mouths to complete it. The same style of tattooing is used by all the islanders, the conly exception being the chiefs, who have, as a mark of distinction, four lines drawn over their cheeks, running from the temples down to the jaws. The dress of the men consists of a short petricoat, made of fibres. The people are polygamists, and what we understand the term morality is a thing unknown to them; both sexes revel in sensuality. As in the Carolines, the population is gradually disappearing, the result of the corruption of morals and the consequent widespread debauchery. The only remedies known to them in case of sickness are topid water and a certain green leaf which has a cooling effect, and is applied to the seat of the pain: incantations are relied on to do the rest. The dead, unless missionaries have introduced the Christian style of burial, are sewed up in matting, and are on the second day buried at sea. The women are very handy in weaving mats, &c., and the men mostly spend their time in building cances or in fishing. War is of rare occurrence, and there is never much blood spilled in the contests between the hostile parties; the death of a few on either side generally settles the question. A carious custom prevailed on the islands a short time ago, according to which no family was permitted to rear more than two children. It was probably established in order to prevent over-population. Though the custom is no longer enforced, it is a curious fact that a woman who has borne more than two children is a rara avis on the island. The strange circumstance contributes considerably, no doubt, to the gradual dying out of the race, which, to all appearance, will in a short time have become

Mr. Goodridge ought to be welcomed as a useful ally by the English politicians whose chief object is to bring down the value of the land in that country.

The porter of a Dublin grocer was brought up by his master before a magistrate, on a charge which he could not dony. Upon being asked to whom he had sold some chocolate, the pride of Patrick was greatly wounded. "To whom did I sell it?" says Pat, "why, does he think I took the chocolate to sell?" "Then, sir," said the magistrate, "what did you do with it?" "Do with it? Since you must know," said he, "I made tay with it."

Some more or less valuable contributions to ethnological science were made on the 30th November at the Scottish Corporation Banquet Lord Iddesleigh explained that he spoke with a certain amount of Scotch blood in his veins. The Maharajah of Johore refrained from making any such claim. He might, with some appropriateness, have esserted a Hibernian ancestry. A report recently made by the United States Consul at St. Petersburg, states that from 1820 to 1850 Russia ranked first among gold-produco ing countries, yielding at the time of the dis-covery of the gold-mines in America and Australia 12.7 per cent.; from 1861 to 1870, 14 per cent.; and at the present time, about one-fifth of the world's production. A table showing the total production of all the gold-bearing districts in Russia for various periods, shows that from the year 1814 down to 1880, the total production amounted to 32,718,000 ounces.

M. Jules Claretic in one of his feuilletons tells a story of his hailing a cab in the Rue des Filles St. Thomas. "Dirige pedes mees in viam Pacis," said he. "Ah, Monsieur," replied the coschman. "I see you know my misfortunes," and he drove him direct to the Rue de la Paix. Is it, we should like to ask, to one of the unfrocked priests who to largely recruit the ranks of the Paris cabdrivers, that we must impute the death of the "distinguished naval officer." who, after getting safely home from the campaign in Tonquin, has just been run over and killed on the boulevards?

According to the London correspondent of a provincial newspaper, an American company of theatrical performers had determined, if suitably encouraged, to come to England for the purpose of giving a series of dramatic representations. It will not be at all surprising if it should receive the encouragement it desires. Foreign art usually finds a hearty welcome in London. There is generally some entrepreneur who is willing to take the necessary risk, and who, as a rule, finds the speculation fairly profitable. London is a truly cosmopolitan oity, and is ready to applaud anything that is excellent, by whomsoever it is furnished. It has given a temporary home not only to kinsmen, like the Americans, or to neighbours, like the French, but to German, Italian, Dutch, and even Japanese and Indian artists. Italian opera has been acclimatised there for more than a century; French tragedy and comedy have become almost familiar to English audiences. Nor have foreign forformers made merely a succés de curiosité in England. We do not know that very much was taught by the Dutch players; but we had undoubtedly something tolearn from French lightness and ensemble. the Gormans certainly taught us how to make stage-crowds life-like, and, if the Italianshave not revolutionised our vocal modes, they have, of late, instructed us in the method of truly agile and expressive dancing. The Americans may also have a useful lesson for us. The pièces de résistance, it appears, are "Turkish plays of the opera bouffe description." Well, at present opera bouffe is rather discredited in England. Possibly tho ladies and gentlemen from Eastern Europe may do something to revive and reform this particular form of art. There is talk of a Parsee company coming to a London theatre. Clearly, then our actors will not fail for want of various exemplars. Perhaps, if we do not take care, the tutors may outnumber the pupils, and then we shall begin to deplore once more "the decadence of the British stage."

THE RANGE OF VISION. In perfectly clear weather the distance was immediately superseded by a laugh quite from which an object of small size (a man, as hearty as that of any of the company, for example) is visible to the naked eye cannot exceed about three and a half miles. when the object is seen in relief against a valley of the Grindelwald, in Switzerland, it of Lopevi rose to a height of 5,000 feet, is possible to see a tourist upon the Jungfrau | while still further ahead towered the rugged creased by means of a simple opera glass, from which rolled a dense cloud of smoke From the Havre jetty persons may thus be and steam. We have here a case of refraction, such as is explained in elementary works on physics. Everyone also knows the therry of the mirage put forth by the celebrated Monge, who explains the phenomenon as due to a diminution of the air! density in contact with the superheated earth. A contrary theory will explain the mirage at. While the sun is making the atmosphere intensely hot, the sea and the strata of emanating from the sea will pass from one stratum into another . I less density, there earth remain relatively cold, and a calmness of it to permit its strate to become superposed in the order of their density. It is precisely when these-two-conditions are fulfilled that the phenomenon of the mirage occurs. On such days ships rise instead of descending in measure as they recede. As the horizon is perceived by direct visibility, a ship is finally seen above the horizon, as it were suspended in the air. It is the famous "phantom ship," familiar to sailors -a visible ship in its natural, upright position. If atmospheric conditions were favourable, a second ship would be seen above the first, &c. It assumed the form of a small apron of native matting, which was secured round the waist by a wide cincture, which terminated in an oval-shaped appendage about two and a half feet long, neatly fringed about, and decorated with feathers. This singular costume, which in the distance bad somewhat the appearance of a peacock's tail, was not mot with on any of the other islands. Most of the houses of the village were neatly built, and many of them were larger than any we had found upon other islands. The life led by the natives, too, appeared to accord with the most attractive pictures that have been drawn of rural simplicity flourishing under a genial climate. Beneath the projecting roof of almost every but, and under the shade of almost every tree, picturesque groups of natives were squatting and lying about, the women gambolling with troops of children, while the men squatted or on the handsome and delicate face of the reclined upon the ground, armed with their great statesman gave place to a smile, which spears and clubs and quivers of poisoned arrows.
